Martin Harvey is an entomologist and biological recorder. He works part-time at the UK Biological Records Centre, on projects such as iRecord and the recently launched Pollinator Monitoring Scheme. He has been instrumental in helping and setting up of the Bringsty Common Biological Recording Group and is always on hand to help with software queries as well as helping with identification. Martin also carries out entomological surveys, provides biodiversity data management support, and teaches wildlife identification and recording for organisations including the Field Studies Council and Wildlife Trusts. He lectures on MSc courses for Manchester Metropolitan University and Birkbeck, University of London. As a volunteer, he is county moth recorder for Berkshire and runs the national recording scheme for Soldierflies and allies.
